EQUINE TIPS

Hoof Abscesses Following Dry Weather

Hoof abscesses often occur with heavily pregnant mare's or overweight ponies.

This results from standing under trees in the shade or grazing on dry soil. Moisture is taken into the dry soil and the hoof shrinks. Small hairline cracks appear and may become infected and abscesses can develop.

Check their hooves every day or so for 'heat in the feet' to avoid infections, abscesses and lameness. Consult your vet or farrier for advice.

RAIN SCALD

Rain scald or rot most often occurs when the skin has been compromised in some way. Compromise occurs during times of high humidity, prolonged rainfall, or increased exposure to biting insects. Horse owners should take steps to limit impact when these environmental conditions are present.

Rain scald is a bacterial infection of the skin that results in the formation of matted scabs usually affecting the neck, face, back and rump but occasionally the lower limbs.

The most important step in treating rain scald is to remove the crusty scab like lesions and expose the damaged skin to oxygen. This usually is done by bathing the affected area of skin with some type of antimicrobial shampoo (Betadine, Chlorhexidine, etc) and gently massage the area to try and remove the lesions with a brush or curry comb. Leave the solution on for 10 minutes and repeat for 5-7 days.

Rug your horses, both affected and non-affected, as a preventative method.
